

LEADING THE WAY: MANAGEMENT & SUPERVISORY SERIES

Program Overview

LDI's Management and Supervisory Series provides managers and supervisors with personal and human relations skills required for effective performance. Regardless of the type of technical expertise related to a particular management function, effective management/supervision depends on the ability to "get things done" through other people. Organizing, motivating, and monitoring human resource performance is a critical part of the role.

Program Format

The LDI program consists of 8 modules (4 hours each) which address key management/supervisory competencies. Each competency is addressed in a separate module, so organizations can adapt or modify materials to meet their needs.

Delivery Method

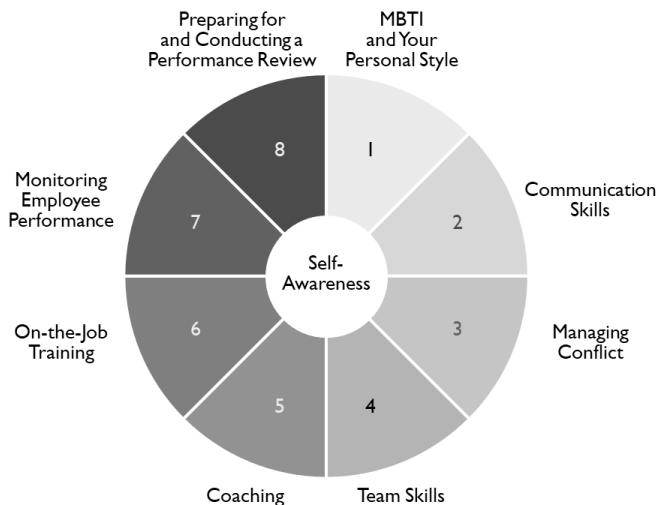

The training is delivered in a virtual, instructor-led format and includes activities designed to encourage interaction and practice. In some modules, standardized assessment instruments provide participants with data related to their own performance. Participants are expected to engage in the learning process and share job-related examples and experiences.

Program Evaluation

At LDI, we support the Deming philosophy that says, "If it doesn't get measured, it doesn't get done." Therefore, each program module includes:

- A pre-post assessment of content (knowledge), or
- A performance activity that requires participants to demonstrate competency (skills).

By including assessments as part of the learning process, participants are able to focus their efforts, review their progress, and identify the need for additional information or clarification.

PRICE

Per person: $995 for all eight modules
